KGW: 5 ways to help protect yourself from wildfire smoke - Link

What to do/bring (Link - Bianca Wright's FB Post):

⚠️ What everyone should do even if you're not in imminent danger:

✅ Take a picture of every room of your house and INSIDE every cabinet and drawer. This will help when making claims for insurance. You will forget all of the things you've collected over the years and having photos will help take the guess work on what you have (potentially) lost. From their experience, insurance companies will question you on EVERYTHING as you try and piece your life back together.

✅ Make a "just in case" list of the irreplaceable or special things you would want to grab in the event of an evacuation. Having a list ahead of time will prevent panic packing. (In my parents case, they saw the fire approaching miles in the distance and regret not taking more special items but couldn't think in the moment).

⚠️ What items to take in the event of an evacuation:

✅ Important paperwork/documents. It's easiest if you already have one central location or box for all of these that you can grab and go.

✅ Blueprints of your home (if you have them). This will help in the event of both insurance and rebuild. My family specifically said to make sure you have record of each and every upgrade that you have had done to your home so you get the full value on your claim. It's important to get your home reappraised after each remodel to have an official record.

✅ Original or one of a kind items that are either special or very difficult to replace. This can include family heirlooms, jewelry, pictures, albums, artifacts, etc.

✅ Clothing & Shoes- Not your whole wardrobe, but enough items that you love that will help you get by while you get back on your feet. My mom wishes she had grabbed more.

✅ Electronics & Chargers. Especially if they will help you during an emergency or contain important files that you need for reference/work.

✅ Cash

✅ Your own pillow. A lot of shelters and other caretakers will likely provide blankets or sleeping bags but there's nothing like having your own pillow in the wake of disaster.

✅ If you have a pool or other water source, consider submerging things you would hope to save that you don't necessarily want to pack in a car. Example includes fine china or glass. There's no guarantee but it has a better chance of survival when submerged.
